

Abstract

A method and a device for the production of NaDCl_4 , in which D is aluminum or iron, is described. The method includes a first reaction step in which a melt of aluminum or iron is reacted with chlorine gas to give gaseous metal halide. This is subsequently reacted, in a second reaction step, with solid sodium chloride to give the corresponding compound and is separated off as a melt.